

Proposed new structure for the ICCA Board

Reasons:

- To adjust for an unintended consequence impacting Canada and potentially any new countries that would join the program.
- To accommodate the new countries joining the program.
- To implement a fair representation on the ICCA Board.
- To truly “internationalize” the ICCA Board.

Current structure:

- 46 voting members on the ICCA Board
 - o Includes 1 representative from each local board (37)
- Of the 38 local boards
 - o 34 United States
 - o 3 Canada
 - o 1 India (national board)

Description of proposed new structure

- ASA – credentialing organization (no change)
- ICCA – certifying body
 - Sets the overall policies for the program (same as it is currently)
 - Same number of representatives from each country (new feature)
- National and/or Local Boards
 - Not all countries will need or want a national coordinating group, the country will need to decide what works best for them
 - National, if needed, would be a coordinating group and could be the implementation body depending on the size of the country
 - US – national coordinate group and local boards to implement the program
 - National coordinate group would focus on issues that are specific to the host country but not of importance at the International level or to all countries
 - India – currently has one national board and may have regional boards to implement the program
 - Local (state/province/region) boards implement the program
 - Canada – may not need or want a national coordinating group, they currently have 3 local boards that implement the program
